EUROPEAN EPILEPSY DAY

14th – 16th February 2011

“ Epilepsy not only imposes enormous burdens on persons diagnosed with the condition; the economic burden that it imposes on national economies must also be recognized. Economic studies have shown that it is cheaper to provide treatment for people with epilepsy, thereby allowing them to live normal lives, playing a positive role in their national economies, than it is to provide the social services they require as persons with untreated epilepsy.

Mike Glynn, President, International Bureau for Epilepsy
